

Texas Instruments Named to 100 Best Corporate Citizens List

Company Ranks Number Ten

DALLAS (April 26, 2006) -- Texas Instruments (TI) has been named to the prestigious 100 Best Corporate Citizens list presented by Business Ethics magazine, which recognizes companies with a commitment to higher standards and best practices in corporate social responsibility. This is TI's fourth time to be listed and its first in the top ten.

Companies are rated based on how they serve stakeholder groups including employees, the community, investors, minority and women business owners, customers and how they deal with environmental issues and corporate governance.

"To be recognized in the top ten is validation of our basic tenet of good corporate citizenship. For TI, strong ethics are not just an afterthought, they are part of our every day business strategy," said David Reid, TI vice president and director of Ethics.
